Taming War. Culture and Technology for Peace

By Andrew Greig

The author suggests how we can solve the problems of war. He believes that technology could be used for resolving conflicts without causing major damage. He believes that we also need to improve our political processes, moving to an eventual world parliament.

Andrew Greig was born in 1943 in Jerusalem and brought up in the United Kingdom. He has been involved in broadcasting, education video production, public relations and health education. Various jobs include bank clerk, school teacher, laboratory assistant, lumberjack and construction worker. He was a member of an advance medical team during the Rwandan refugee crisis and has a continuing interest in peace issues.
