Love in the Age of Drought

By Fiona Higgins

This is a delightful fish-out-of-water story about the city/rural culture clash overcome by the course of true love.

It is also a moving tribute to Australia's strength and capacity for survival and renewal.

Fiona isn't looking for a relationship, let alone the upheaval of falling in love with an intelligent, eco-friendly cotton farmer from south-east Queensland, but life doesn't always turn out as planned.

Fiona Higgins has a background in corporate communications, non-profit management and philanthropy. She is Executive Director of a private philanthropic foundation, and consults to individuals and agencies on social investment opportunities in Australia and Asia.

Fiona currently lives in Sydney with her husband, Stuart, and their son, Oliver.
