Excellent	As a new member of the community, I valued the opportunity to meet other residents, hear of ongoing issues/work/opportunities etc and to be able to contribute to discussion.	No, I thought the format, venue and time was fine	No, Sorry, can't see the attached summary, but as a new member, I didn't really have many comments. The main one, was around information being available for incoming residents. While there's some great information available through the Scotland Island Community website, there could be some more specific information around process for accessing boat tie up and contacts for each island wharf, more detailed info on vehicles on the island etc.	I would be very keen to continue to participate in similar ongoing, community discussion on topics/issues impacting our community. I love this place and the community and appreciate the opportunity to be involved in discussing topics which will impact us all..... while understanding that my desires/views may not always be adopted. Sorry to submit the so late. Cheers Ian
Good	A great forum that was very informative and allowed plenty of opportunity for discussion and feedback	No, it deserved a bigger roll up, and hopefully this will be achieved next time.	Yes
Good	Basically it mostly went over old ground and I'm not sure I learned much new, but it is always pleasant to reconnect with neighbours and this kind of event needs to be held if only to heighten awareness.	The only change I would suggest is that people are strongly encouraged, or perhaps even directed to swap tables half way through. I wanted to but there was no room at the other table, so I stayed where I was. It may be that they were thinking the same	No, summary? Have I missed something?	To be honest I feel more than adequately consulted. I wouldn't let lack of consultation become a source of stress. I think that anyone who wants to get involved can get involved. If there is a problem at all then it is that it is difficult to get a little involved without getting swamped. But I thing. It may be better to actually direct us to swap.		suppose we all just have to learn to say no.

Good	It was a well-behaved group of citizens, conversing and sharing information and ideas.	No need for improved venue/time/format.	No, I haven't found the "attached" summary I'm afraid.	It's difficult to see SIRA as welcoming or wanting broader community involvement if SIRA members don't use their people skills when engaging with people who are new to them. SIRA members may well hold their positions due to the experience and expertise they bring in their field. Within the group that I participated in, there were 2 SIRA members who have never asked my name, chose not to make eye contact or engage with me directly at all. I was at the same table as them for at least an hour. I'm quite sure they still don't know my name (I do know their names. Not because they introduced themselves to me but, because I ask for such details). This gives the impression that they believe I have little to offer them and that they feel they have no reason to offer anything to me. I assume they aren't disinterested in their own role, or they wouldn't be there. Just a social skill oversight??

Good	well organised with most relevant background information presented or made available for viewing	no not really	Yes	I think the possibility of people on the island with appropriate skills forming working parties to reduce the cost of connection to maserating pump should be investigated eg for trench digging etc may even be tradesmen prepared to donate time to help. also some people may not be able to afford connection SIRA could look at raising money so these people could be connected to sewer line. Also I am prepared to do some flow and pressure testing on the existing water lines on the island to determine if in an interim period we can make use of the existing water lines to provide water to all households with permanent metered connections. There is no doubt that a big tank at the top of the island is one solution for a reliable water supply. Also SIRA should investigate the possibility of obtaining a grant from the EPA for the recovery of household waste.

Good	Well managed	Follow up on items discussed and plan to implement or not.	Yes	Need follow up sub committee meetings to follow thru on suggested plans to improve fire trails on the island and better wharf facilities on the island for better safety for commuter boats.
